Hospital care is clustered in the south west of Nigeria, with huge gaps in the north. On average only 14.6% of married couples use modern contraceptive methods, with huge gaps between rich and poor, urban and rural women.

There is an increase in the inequity of the distribution of each delivery care indicator by urban and rural areas.

This can also be seen in the distributions of care by poverty quintile: for each indicator uptake of care falls among the poorest 2 quintiles, increases in the middle quintiles and changes little in the richest quintile.
